HANDBOOKS ON THE HISTORY OF RELIGION.

THE RELIGIONS OF INDIA.

BY EDWARD WASHBURN HOPKINS, PH.D.,

Professor of Sanskrit in Bryn Mawr College.

8vo. Cloth. xvi + 612 pages. Introduction price, $2.00.

This book gives an account of the religions of India in the chronological order of their development. The point of view is chiefly historical and descriptive, but the causes leading to the successive phases of religious belief are kept prominently before the reader. A new feature of this book, as compared with the one work that has preceded it on the same lines, Barth's Religions of India, is the constant employment of illustrative material, drawn from the original sources. Copious extracts are given from Vedic, Brahmanic, Jain, Buddhistic, and later sectarian literatures. The volume contains also a full description of the modern sects of to-day, a chapter on the religions of the wild tribes, and one on the relations between the religions of India and those of the West.
